Net Art
Process Book

Lea Akers

Description

This process book records the steps of the net art project, starting from the randomized sentence than was made from an online article and progressing from there.
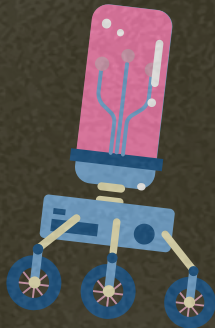

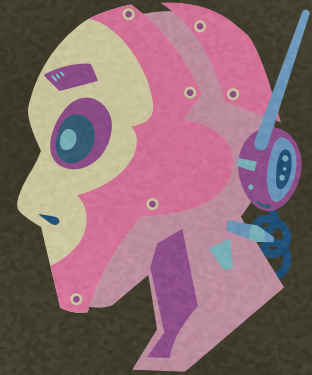

Sentences from Articles

First sentence

Capture rocks to make the body, built from moon dust.

Second sentence

The moon will want the body back, the ground could make It's rocks from dust.

I couldn't decide between these two phrases, so I decided to combine them in the project to see what I could come up with. I took a liking to the theme while looking for images, and made drafts of web pages with them.

Drafts of Pages

Final Pages

Capture rocks to make the body

First Page

This one was the most difficult, simply because I was eager to start the process without much knowledge. However, with a few more demos in the class, I was able to successfully recreate my draft.
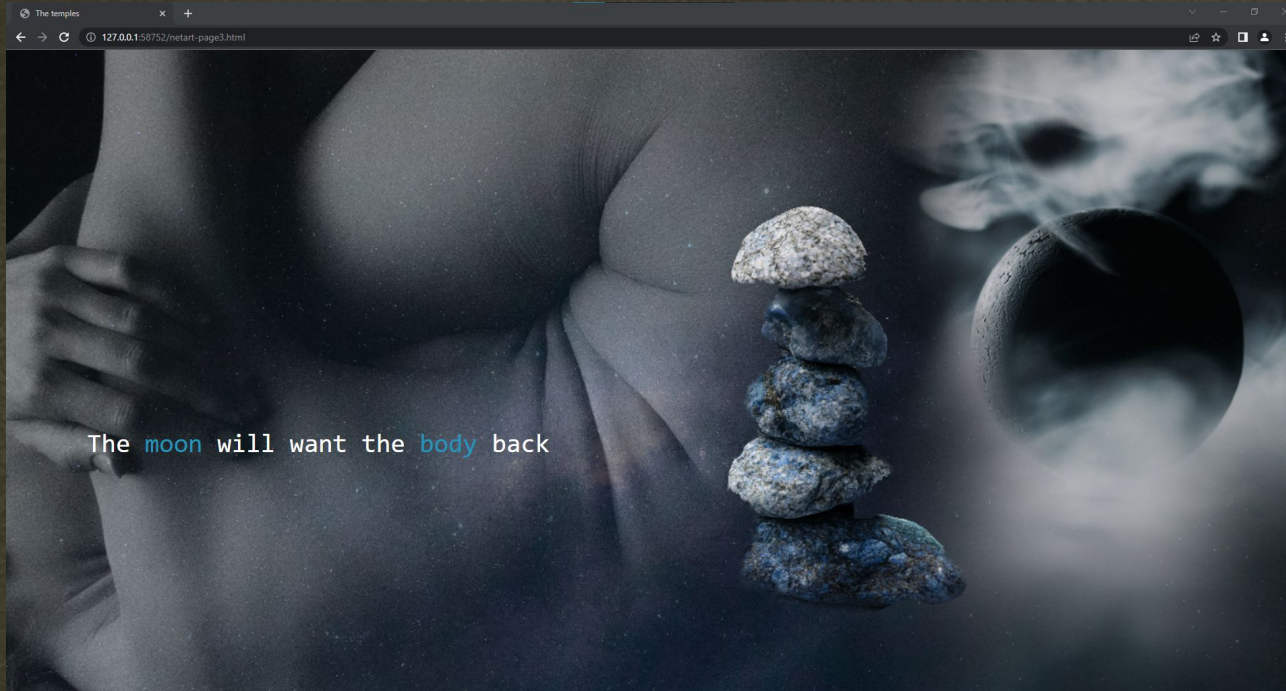

Final Pages

Second Page

This page was much easier than the first, and only contains two links to other pages. I decided to extend the page and allow the viewer to scroll down as one of my last decisions, but I do wish I had placed a third link somewhere at the bottom of the page as a reward for the viewer.
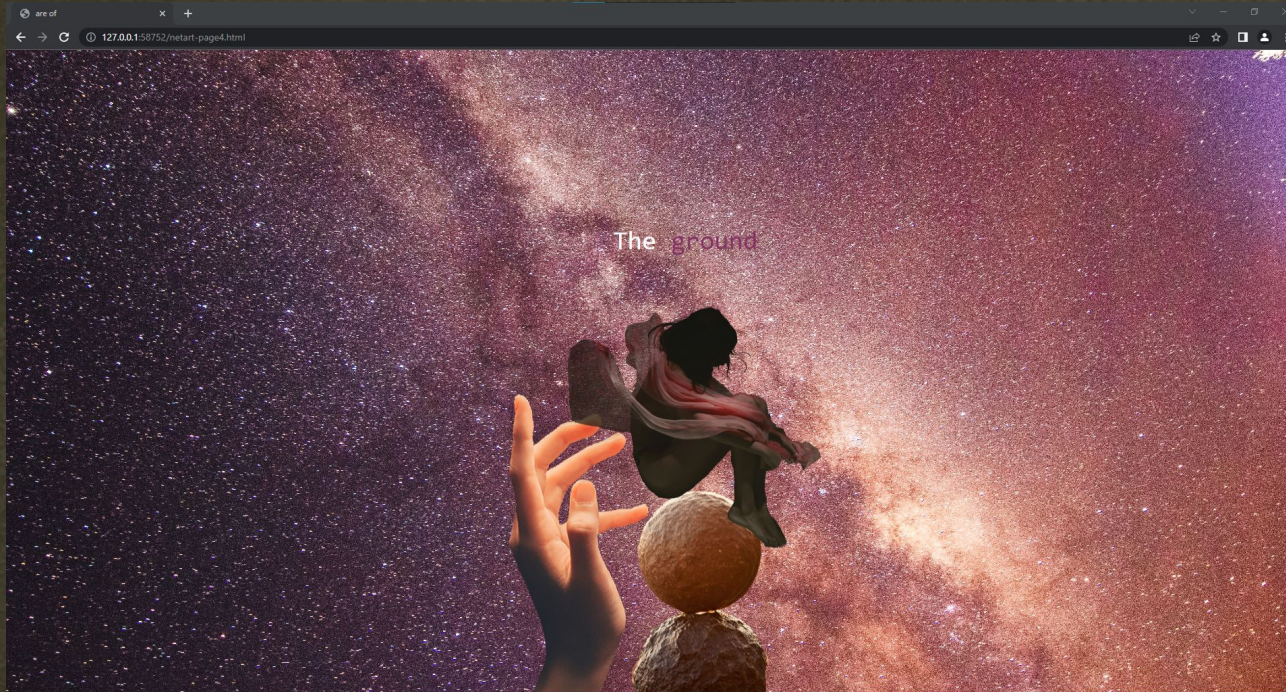

Final Pages

Third Page

In this page I tackled opacity, which was fairly simple after researching how to do it. I do enjoy how accurate to my draft this one is.
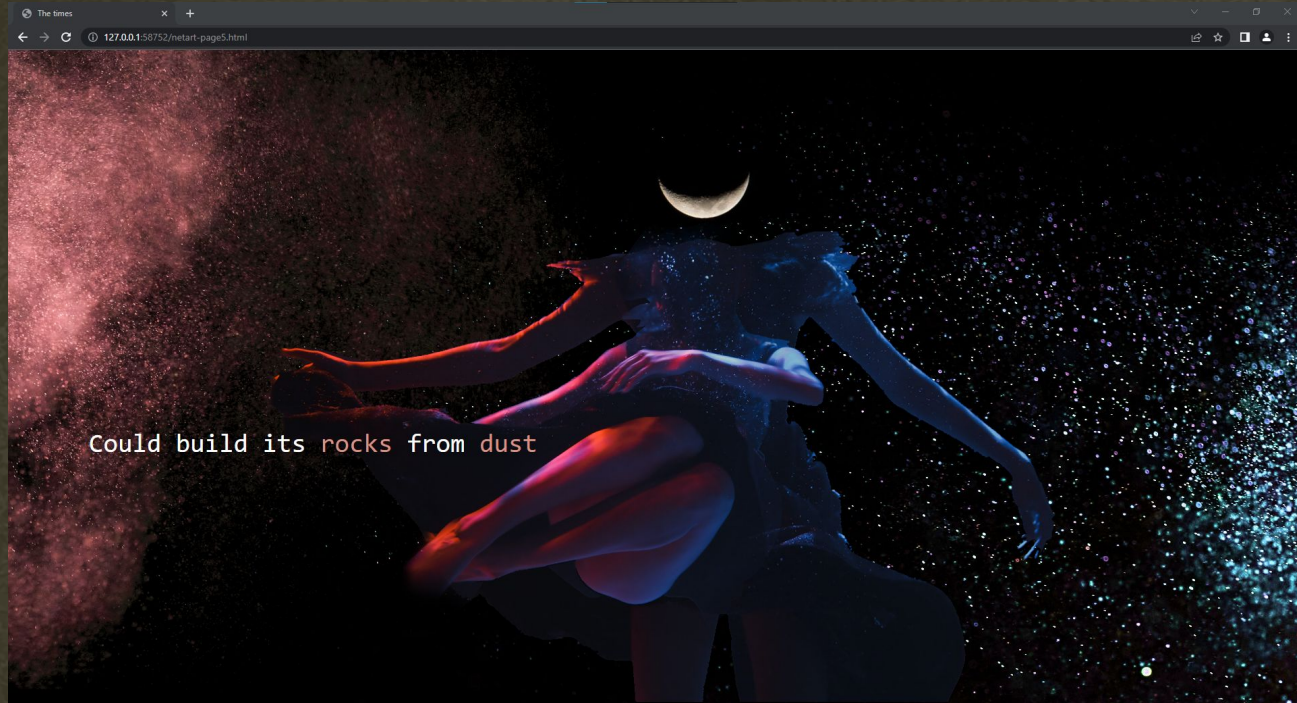

Final Pages

Fourth Page

Centering the items on this page was difficult, and they still move around when the window is resized. I wish this weren't the case but unfortunately I did not have the knowledge to fix this.

Final Pages

Fifth Page

This last one is one of my favorites. I spent a lot of time on the position of the pink dust until finally getting it where I wanted it to be. The "dust" link leads back to the launch page.

Statement

      Overall, I am very satisfied with the outcome of each of the pages. I feel as though this net art project is as close to the original idea as I could be. There are only a few subtle changes that were integrated during the process. The text was added last because I felt as though it tied them all together. Each of the pages have at least two links to two different pages and they are all non-linear. If I could change anything it would be how the images move around depending on the size of the window. Other than that, I am happy with how the project turned out.
